System Scales

Diagram shows the three scales define the three dimensional Color Space. It has a central vertical axis which represents the neutral scale varying from 10 (white) to 0 (black). Encircling the central axis are the five primary hue sectors (R, Y, G, B, P), and the five secondary hue sectors, each divided into 10 units. Radiating out from the neutral core is the scale of chroma or saturation. The Munsell Color System can produce standards which Notations (Munsell), specifying numbers for the three attributes of hue, tone, and saturation, are given for the different colors observed, which are then converted into ISCC-NBS Color Nomenclature. The percentages given are visual estimates as to the amounts of the different colors observed in the face up position.
